

By beginnings (Genesis 1-5)

The numbering format along with the word definitions below (unless noted otherwise) follows the numbering format of “the Ancient Hebrew Lexicon of the Bible” by Jeff A. Benner. <http://Ahlb.ancient-hebrew.org>

NOTE: Strong’s Concordance uses vowel pointed Massoretic Hebrew. Using this vowel pointing “trick” the Massoretics were able to add many definitions to a Hebrew word, even though the spelling of the Hebrew word never changes. These new definitions exist only by man-made vowel pointing. The KJV of the Bible was also influenced by this corrupted vowel-pointed Massoretic Hebrew as can be seen below by the many definitions they can now use to define one simple Hebrew word (see definitions in red below). These definitions are simply invented by translators, but are not found in the original Biblical Hebrew. The below definitions, as possible, uses only the Hebrew “root words” rather than the definitions added by vowel-pointed Hebrew. Vowel pointed Hebrew IS NOT BIBLICAL. We avoid the use of it in our translations of the Hebrew Bible. This may sometimes result in an awkward English translation, but one that can still be understood. Words shown in italics (like this) are added words used to clarify the sentence structure to correct English.

1022-A (N)* (אֶת AT) - At: Something that moves near something to be with it. (This Hebrew word is often used as a “continuum” or a joining of two or more phrases, or a “mark” or a “way point” as in an agreement place between two sections. In Hebrew, when used in general terms, it is like using a “semicolon” in English or “a mark” ending the making of a point in a statement and introducing the beginning of another, or like saying “and so” or “it also came to be that” or “that is to say, or even” as a repeat or a continuum in the sentence. It has several other meanings in English depending upon content, but many translators just ignore it, or maybe show that the number exists but make no attempt to translate it. (Yes, sometimes it is confusing, we have included it simply as a semi colon [;]). |k|j|v|: plowshare, coulter, sign, against, with, in, upon |str: 852, 853, 854, 855, 3487}
